“ My mother had a journey of a life, the good and the bad, but through it all she didn't let it steal her joy. She was always happy and wanted joy for others around her. Life wasn't perfect and it'll never be, so my momma did the best she could for us and as I became an adult I realized her sacrifices, I understood her struggles and I appreciated her even more. My love for my momma will continue on, I'm sure I'll learn more of her in the coming days and weeks as many of you share your stories of my momma, so thank you. We've been rehashing our memories of her and I smile on the outside, but my heart is filled with joy and appreciation of who she was. I'm thankful that she is no longer in the state that she was in, because we all know momma didn't want to live like that, not the Sarah Mae we knew. Momma, I love you then, I love you now and I will continue to love & appreciate you forever more!
